

ATTORNEY AT WORK 4TH ANNUAL

SOCIAL MEDIA MARKETING SURVEY REPORT

Attorney at Work's 4th Annual Social Media Marketing Survey

Our newest Social Media Marketing Survey marks the fourth year that we've delved into usage, ROI, and how legal professionals are collectively spending their time online to build their businesses. The bottom line: It's working.

Usage is up — 93 percent of survey respondents are on social — but the reported ROI has skyrocketed. More than two-thirds — 71 percent — of lawyer respondents say it is “very” or “somewhat” responsible for bringing in new business, up from just 38 percent four years ago. And, whereas four years ago 60 percent of lawyers considered social media part of their marketing strategy, this year 85 percent do.

Solos, in particular, have embraced social media, with 20 percent saying it is “very responsible” for bringing in business, compared with 14 percent of their peers. And they are allocating more of their marketing budget to social than their peers, despite concerns about fake news, toxicity and privacy issues on some platforms.

Interestingly, the data show that while the majority of firms are using social to build relationships and their brand, only slightly more than half are taking advantage of social media management tools.

This indicates to us that with the right support, strategies could be even more effective, and ROI could move higher.

But that's just our take. Give us yours on your favorite social platform. Let's get this conversation started.

Social Media Marketing Survey Highlights

Here are highlights from the survey, based on responses from 406 legal professionals, including 183 lawyers. See page 11 for more information about the survey and demographic information.

- What's the profession's social media story now? Nearly everybody is now using social media — 93 percent of all survey respondents and 88 percent of lawyers who responded.
- More lawyers are incorporating social media into their marketing strategy. Eighty-five percent of respondents say social is part of their strategy. When we look at lawyers' responses, the number is the same: 85 percent of lawyers say social is part of their strategy compared with 70 percent in 2017 and just 60 percent in 2015.
- Too toxic? Given the role social media played in 2016 elections interference, privacy concerns and multiple security breaches, we had to ask: "Is the level of toxicity and fake news on social media enough of a concern to curtail use for marketing purposes?" Most respondents say no, but almost a quarter say it is a concern.
- Which platforms are used for marketing? Most respondents — 81 percent — say LinkedIn is tops, with Facebook second at 72 percent. Lawyers were most enthusiastic about LinkedIn as well, with 77 percent saying it is their favored marketing platform, with Facebook second.
- Which are used most often? As for which sites they personally use most often, Linked remained on top, at 41 percent compared with Facebook at 33 percent. Lawyers, however, favor Facebook at 36 percent compared with LinkedIn at 33 percent.
- But is it working? More than two-thirds — 71 percent — of lawyers say social media is "very" to "somewhat" responsible for bringing in new clients. That's up from 49 percent in 2017 and 38 percent in 2015. The percentage of lawyers who said social media was "very" responsible doubled from the previous year: 14 percent in 2018 compared with 7 percent in 2017.

TO WHAT EXTENT DO YOU BELIEVE YOUR USE OF SOCIAL MEDIA IS DIRECTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR BRINGING IN NEW CLIENTS?

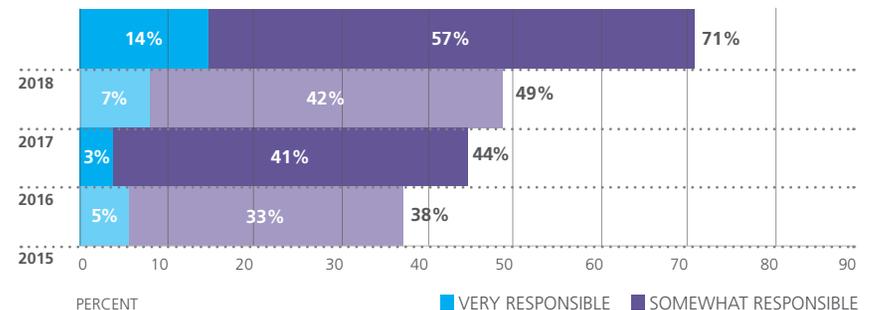

ALL RESPONDENTS
VERY RESPONSIBLE 11%
SOMEWHAT RESPONSIBLE 57%
NOT AT ALL RESPONSIBLE 16%
DIFFICULT TO MEASURE 16%

LAWYERS
VERY RESPONSIBLE 14%
SOMEWHAT RESPONSIBLE 57%
NOT AT ALL RESPONSIBLE 19%
DIFFICULT TO MEASURE 11%

More than two-thirds of lawyers say social media marketing is "very" or "somewhat" responsible for bringing in new clients. That's up from 38 percent in 2015.

71%

PERCENTAGE OF LAWYERS WHO SAY SOCIAL MEDIA IS "VERY" OR "SOMEWHAT" RESPONSIBLE FOR BRINGING IN BUSINESS

- Which platforms are most effective for bringing in new business? As for which specific platforms are working, LinkedIn took first place at 40 percent among all respondents with Facebook second at 29 percent. For lawyers, the gap between the top two platforms is tighter: 34 percent say LinkedIn is most effective and 32 percent favor Facebook. “None” was third at 15 percent, and Twitter a very distant fourth at only 4 percent. Among solo practitioners, Facebook ranked No. 1 for being most effective.

- What are you posting? First among all respondents is “content I’ve written” at 70 percent, with “content written by my firm” second and “curated industry news” ranking third.
- Most important reason to use social media? For the first time, we asked respondents why they use social media for business. “To stay in touch with contacts and colleagues” ranked first, followed by “to build personal brand” — except for solo and small firm lawyers, who ranked personal brand building No. 1. “To read the news” ranked dead last among all groups. However, when asked how useful social media is for staying on top of news and trends in the legal industry, 19 percent say it is “extremely” useful, another 34 percent say it is “very useful” and 32 percent say it is “somewhat useful.”
- Paid social advertising. Respondents overall view Facebook ads as the most effective platform for paid social at 28 percent, with Google Ads placing second at 19 percent. In contrast, 12 percent say they find LinkedIn ads effective and only 1 percent like Twitter and YouTube ads. When looking at lawyers’ responses, however, solo attorneys favor Facebook by a slightly wider margin — 31 percent — and only 5 percent of solos find LinkedIn ads effective.
- Percentage of marketing budget spent on social? Since social media is a part of most law firms’ marketing strategies, we wondered how that is reflected in social media ad spending. The overwhelming response indicates it’s low: Only 8 percent say they devote more than 50 percent of their budget to social ads, while 75 percent say they spend less than 10 percent of their budget on social.
- How are lawyers managing multiple social accounts and scheduling their marketing activities? When asked, “Do you use any social media management tools such as Hootsuite, Google Analytics, TweetDeck, Buffer, etc.?” 39 percent say they take advantage of management tools, while 58 percent say they do not.
- Content sharing. We also inquired about content-sharing platforms — websites (outside their own blogs, websites and social media accounts) that help lawyers and law firms distribute articles. Among the one-third of respondents using such platforms, LinkedIn, Facebook and JD Supra are the top three.
- Can I get a little help here? Do lawyers handle all of their social media marketing activities themselves? Most do, according to the survey results: 66 percent of lawyers say they do it all, while 28 percent say they get some help, and 7 percent say it is all handled by someone else. In addition, when asked whether their firms use any outside vendors — for example, HubSpot, Clearview Social, Passle — to encourage and support social media activity, 83 percent say no. And, as noted above, a surprisingly low 39 percent of lawyers are using social media management and scheduling tools such as Hootsuite or Buffer. That increases to 52 percent when looking at all respondents.
- When does all this happen? We wanted to get an idea of how much time lawyers are personally spending on social media, and where they do most of it. According to the survey results, almost half—45 percent—say they spend one to five hours per week, while another 27 percent spend five to 10 hours per week. On ends of the spectrum, 21 percent say they spend one hour or less and 8 percent say they spend more than 10 hours per week on social media. As for where they do all this social media—at work, at home, on the weekend? Almost half say “all of the above.”

Social Media Habits of Solo Practitioners

Solo practices represent 25 percent of respondents, and 40 percent of the lawyers responding are solos. So, we thought we'd take a closer look at how they use social media marketing and how it compares with their peers in other firms. Here are some highlights:

- Solos are more enthusiastic about social media's ROI. A surprising 20 percent of solos say social media is “very” responsible for directly bringing in business, and another 49 percent say it is “somewhat effective.” In comparison, only 14 percent of lawyers overall say social is “very responsible” and only 3 percent of lawyers in firms with 100+ lawyers believe it is “very responsible.”

- Which platform do solos use regularly for marketing? LinkedIn and Facebook are neck-in-neck in the race for which social media platform solos use most regularly, at 78 and 76 percent respectively. Twitter is third at 56 percent and Instagram is pulling up fourth with 25 percent. Facebook, however, is the platform solos prefer using personally, with 42 percent saying they use it most often compared with LinkedIn at just 24 percent.

- What's working for solos? Interestingly, while most lawyers rank LinkedIn the most effective platform at bringing in business, solos say Facebook is most effective and LinkedIn is second.
- Keeping it all close. Solos are more likely to do most of the social media management and content creation themselves, rather than outsource any of the work: 80 percent of solos handle all social media writing and updating themselves compared with 65 percent of other lawyers. And most solos do without social sharing or management tools: 61 percent say they do not use content-sharing platforms and 68 percent do not use management tools such as Hootsuite, TweetDeck or Buffer. As for using an outside vendor such as HubSpot for support, 88 percent say they do not.
- Solos have zeroed in on posting original content as a strategy. When asked what they are posting, 81 percent say they post content they have written, compared with 77 percent of all lawyers. Curated news and industry content ranked second. This makes sense considering that the majority of solos say the most important reason for using social media is to build their personal brand. Their peers say “staying in touch with clients and colleagues” is the most important reason.
- Money on the line. Solos are outspending their colleagues on social ads: 10 percent say they spend more than 75 percent of their overall marketing budget on social ads, compared with 5 percent of all lawyers. Another 5 percent say they spend between 50 percent to 75 percent — that means 15 percent of solos spend more than 50 percent of their marketing budget on social ads. The majority, however (66 percent), spend less than 10 percent of their budget on social ads.
- Solos also spend more hours on social media than their colleagues. Ten percent say they spend 10 or more hours on social media compared with 8 percent of all lawyers, with 51 percent of solos spending one to five hours and 7 percent spending five to 10 hours. Also, 12 percent say they spend less than one hour per week on social, compared with 20 percent of other lawyers.

Social Media Marketing Survey Results

Here's how 406 legal professionals, including 183 lawyers, tell us they are using social media.

DO YOU USE SOCIAL MEDIA?

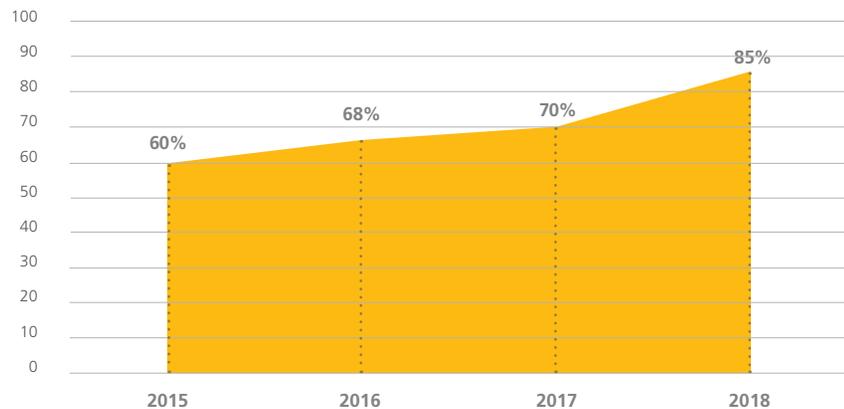

IS YOUR USE OF SOCIAL MEDIA PART OF A MARKETING STRATEGY?

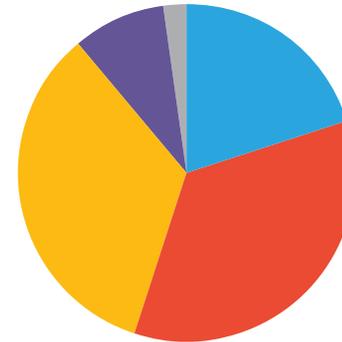

Social media as a legitimate marketing strategy has been gaining ground over past years. Among 2018 respondents, both lawyers and legal professionals, 85 percent say their use is part of a strategy. This is an increase of 25 percent over 2015 results.

PERCENTAGE OF LAWYERS WHO USE SOCIAL MEDIA AS PART OF THEIR MARKETING STRATEGY

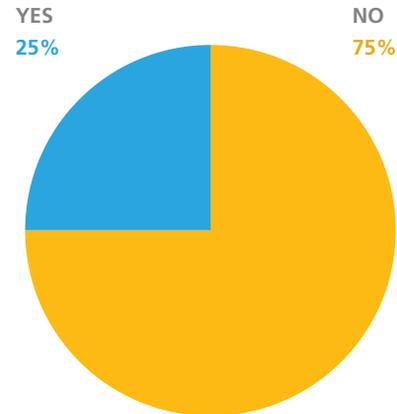

HOW USEFUL IS SOCIAL MEDIA TO STAY ABREAST OF CURRENT EVENTS, TRENDS AND DEVELOPMENTS IN THE LAW?

A majority of respondents — 55 percent — say social media is “extremely” or “very” useful for keeping current in the legal industry.

IS SOCIAL MEDIA TOO TOXIC?

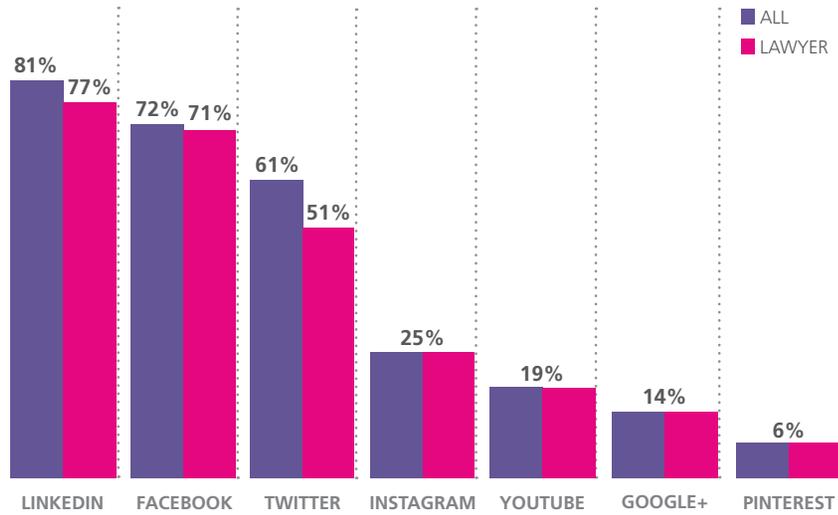

“Is the level of toxicity and fake news on social media enough of a concern to curtail use for marketing purposes?”

Given the role social media played in the 2016 U.S. elections and recent reports on how our social data is being used, we had to ask. One-fourth of survey respondents say they are concerned enough to pull back on social marketing. As for lawyers, 20 percent say it is a concern.

Advertising: How Invested Are Firms in Social Media?

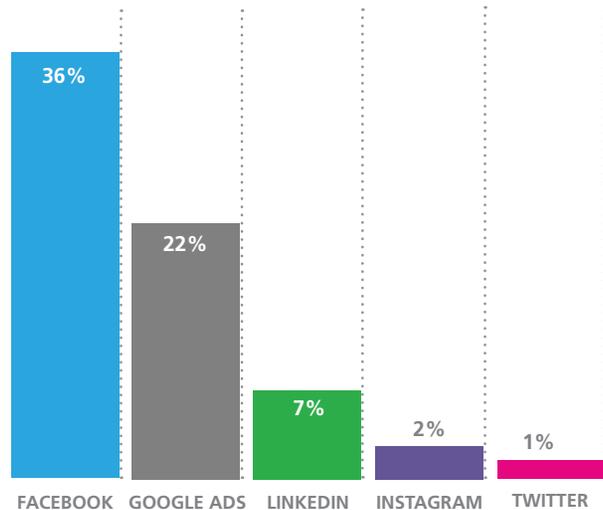

For the first time, we asked about budget for social media advertising.

WHICH PAID ADVERTISING PLATFORMS DO YOU FIND MOST EFFECTIVE?

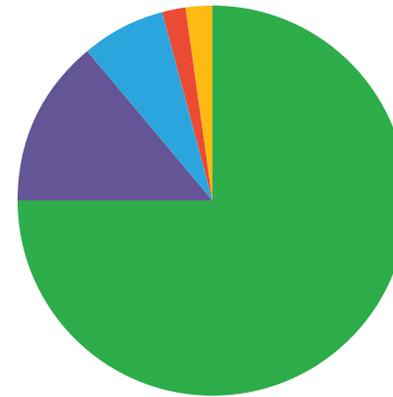

Facebook and Google ads are the most effective for respondents who advertise on social media platforms. Among the 7 percent who chose "other" as their answer to this question, online directories such as Martindale and Avvo were mentioned along with blogging and content marketing generally.

WHICH PAID ADVERTISING PLATFORMS DO SOLO AND SMALL FIRM LAWYERS FIND MOST EFFECTIVE?

When we looked at responses from the 146 lawyers who practice solo or in firms of one to five lawyers, we found a bump in the percentage that find Facebook and Google effective. And, while Instagram received only a fraction of a percent in the overall results, 2 percent of these lawyers have success with Instagram. YouTube, however, received zero responses.

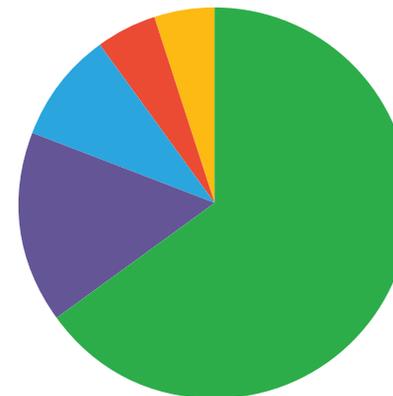

WHAT PERCENTAGE OF YOUR OVERALL MARKETING BUDGET IS SPENT ON SOCIAL MEDIA ADVERTISING?

- 2% spend 75% or more
- 2% spend 50% to 75%
- 7% spend 25% to 50%
- 14% spend 10% to 25%
- 75% spend less than 10%

Though there are outliers who've spent big on social, for the vast majority of respondents, social media advertising accounts for less than 10 percent of their marketing budget.

SOLOS AND FIRMS WITH 2-5 LAWYERS: WHAT PERCENTAGE OF OVERALL MARKETING BUDGET IS SPENT ON SOCIAL MEDIA ADVERTISING?

- 5% spend 75% or more
- 5% spend 50% to 75%
- 9% spend 25% to 50%
- 16% spend 10% to 25%
- 65% spend less than 10%

Solos and those in firms of five lawyers or less spend more on social media advertising than their peers in larger firms. Some 15 percent of solos spend more than 50 percent of their marketing budget on social ads. Solos preferred spend was on Facebook.

About the Survey

Attorney at Work's Fourth Annual Social Media Marketing Survey was conducted in the fall of 2018 and received 406 responses, with 183 lawyers participating.

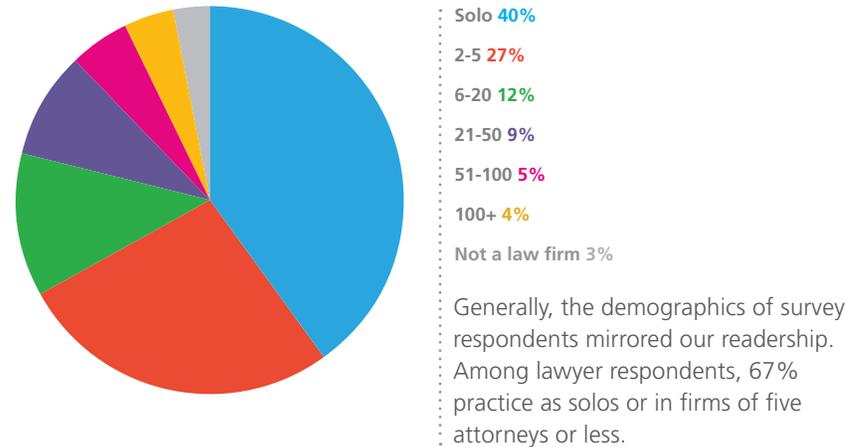

Demographics. Even without a survey, it's clear that social media has grown up as a legitimate marketing tool used by law firms. And, as the social media marketing industry has grown, responsibility for guiding social media strategy has naturally shifted to law firm marketing professionals and consultants.

This shift plays out in our survey demographics. Over the past couple of years, we have found that individual lawyers are making up a smaller percentage of responses. This year, for example, we received more responses from midsize and large firms, 21 percent of all responses, but only 9 percent of those responses came from lawyers. In contrast, 47 percent of survey responses are from firms with one to five lawyers and 67 percent of those responses are from lawyers. So, instead of focusing exclusively on lawyers' responses, this year we have reported results from everyone who responded, breaking out lawyer responses when it seemed relevant.
